Last Lecture

Randy Pausch was sentenced to pancreatic cancer and gave his last lecture. He said that the video I watched was his last lecture. Even though he was sentenced to a time limit, I admired the strong mental strength that he had and finished a pleasant lecture. On the contrary, if I had been sentenced to a time limit, I would not have been able to stand in front of others and give a lecture in such a bright manner. Randy Pausch had a good influence on others until his death, and he looked cool telling students and fellow professors how to overcome crises, help others achieve their dreams, live every moment passionately, and live our own lives. In particular, a happy life exists at this moment, and the words to live with gratitude every day gave me a great impression. This gave people who had difficulty living everyday courage to live tomorrow and created an opportunity to think about the joy of living their lives. Also, I realized again how to regain my precious childhood dreams and childhood innocence that even I had forgotten.
